

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

Determining when to update software of a client device in a client/server architecture is accomplished by receiving client activity data from the client device, and updating software executed by the client device when the client activity data indicates activity less than a predetermined threshold for a selected period of time.